Business Spotlight

Warren County Ambulance District

Time flies by fast and although we may want things to slow down just a bit to catch our breath, there really isn't time for that when we live in a community on the fast track of growth! We will all blink our eyes and find ourselves five years down the road and things will look much different in Warren County.

Planning is essential and the team here at Warren County Ambulance District is in the thick of it. The district's 10-year updated strategic plan will guide the Board of Directors and administration to prepare for the expected new growth while combating a 15% increase in calls over the past 23 months and surpassed 4,000 calls already this year.

The district currently employs 47 people on the payroll with tenures ranging from 28 years to less than six months. We are proud to have them all on the team and part of this community. As with every employer in the country, the commitment to retain and recruit quality employees is key to an organization's success and we feel this is the reason for consistent quality emergency medical services in Warren County, that generations have deserved since the inception of the district in 1974.

We are committed to embracing the eminent growth, expanding the areas of the district required to support the growth and continue to grow the team here at Warren County Ambulance District for the community to be proud of for years to come.

The Three Most Important Things You Look for in Your Employment Relationship

By: Rick Suttle

There are three key employer characteristics a job seeker should look for in an employment relationship: reputation, career advancement and work balance. These often show up in employment surveys as being most important for candidates. If you want to find out how a potential employer stacks up when it comes to these three things, you can research its websites, read articles about the company and develop a list of questions before each interview.

Reputation and Culture

There are many factors to consider when evaluating a company's reputation. Ideally, it should be profitable, well established and free of ethical or legal problems. If the company is publicly traded, you can research its financial results and Securities and Exchange Commission filings on the investors' page of its website. Make sure the company has track record of consistent earnings and sales growth, taking into account the occasional blip due to a bad quarter or negative economic impact. You should also find out if it has ever been investigated, fined or sued for illegal or unethical activity. If the company is privately held, you might find details about its performance by checking for news articles in local papers or trade journals. You also want to ensure that it is in a growing industry, one that has not been adversely affected by new technologies and market shifts. For example, if you are interested in working in media, you're probably better off finding a job in digital rather than print media.

Career Development

Your employer must first have an open position that is commensurate with your education and experience. The proper job fit allows you to more quickly make positive contributions. Additionally, check with the company about advancement opportunities. Ask the interviewer to describe the typical career path for your particular job. Find out whether others in the department have advanced in their careers, what levels they advanced to, and how long it took to advance to different levels. Check if the company has training systems in place to help you learn your job and develop new skills. Determine whether the employer encourages further education with tuition reimbursement.

Work-Life Balance

Another important element employers must offer is a balance between work and personal life. You should not be expected to always work long hours at the expense of your family life. Employers must also provide adequate time off for workers, including personal days, vacation time and maternity leave. Some employers allow men to take maternity leave to help their wives. During interviews, ask about flex scheduling and work-from-home options. You also can check online surveys regarding employer job satisfaction, which are often featured on job-search and career websites.

Other Considerations

Compensation such as salary, bonuses, profit sharing and health benefits are very important things to look for in an employment relationship and should also be taken in consideration when seeking the right job. You can research the average compensation for most jobs through the Bureau of Labor Statistics' "Occupational Outlook Handbook."

SEASON OF GIVING

A TIME TO SHOW YOU CARE!

Compass Health Network's annual Season of Giving program collects toys and monetary donations to bring joy to families that are struggling in your community during the holiday season.

The Event: A store like environment is created where parents and/or guardians are invited to make gift selections for their children. Their selected items are gift wrapped and concealed in a large bag to avoid spoiling any surprises. While the adults are "shopping", children are kept busy creating holiday themed crafts.

Season of Giving Goal: Serve 200 children in need of holiday support.

Two ways to help:

- 1 Make a financial donation at: compasshealthnetwork.org/donate or scan the QR code using your mobile device.
- 2 Drop off an unwrapped toy at participating locations:

Holidays can be a stressful time for families. Season of Giving is one small way to remove stress and offer joy! Please consider being a part of the effort...make a donation, drop off a toy, involve your work friends, family, and neighbors! Deadline for donations: December 1, 2022.
